

Should image be marked as decorative?

1.1.1 Non-text Content

This image has an empty alt text, which indicates that it only has a decorative function. If that is the case the page is in compliance with this criterion.

If the image is decorative you can use CSS to completely separate content from presentation.

If the image has a function the alt text must state this function.

No top-level heading on the page

1.3.1 Info and Relationships

A top level heading helps user agents such as screen readers and search engines to know the main topic of a page.

Make sure your page has a top level heading (H1 or WAI-ARIA role="heading" aria-level="1") that matches the main topic of the page.

Content not included in landmarks

1.3.1 Info and Relationships

HTML5 or WAI-ARIA landmarks are used on the page, but not all content is included.

When using HTML5 or WAI-ARIA landmarks it is best practice to include all content on the page in landmarks. In this way users of assistive technologies can use the landmarks for navigating the page without losing track of content.

Make sure that all content on the page is included in HTML5 or WAI-ARIA landmarks.

Is the image free of text?

1.4.5 Images of Text

This warning will always appear for images on your pages because you need to manually make sure that there is no text in images.

Images that contain text within them are not accessible. Examples of this could include an image that contains the text 'Red shoes on sale'. An alternative text will help screen reader users understand the concept, but other user groups do not benefit from alternative texts.

Dyslexic users who use different tools for reading aloud than visually impaired users will not be able to access either the text in the image or the alternative text with their kind of assistive technologies.

In addition, users with low vision who use magnification programs to enlarge elements on the page can experience that the image become pixelated and more difficult to read when enlarged.

Images of text should be avoided except in special cases, such as in logos. Review the images to assess whether images of text is used and should be avoided. If images of text can't be avoided, the 'alt' should contain the same text as the image.

Link text used for multiple different destinations

2.4.4 Link Purpose (In Context)

The same link text is used for links going to different destinations. Users might not know the difference if they are not somehow explained.

If the destination page is the same, this is not an issue.

If the destination pages are not the same, make sure the links can be distinguished by their link texts or WAI-ARIA labels ('aria-labelledby' or 'aria-label') alone to make the difference clear to all users.

! Element not highlighted on focus

AA 2.4.7 Focus Visible

With keyboard navigation it is important that the focused component can be visually identified. If the focused component is not somehow highlighted, the user cannot be sure which component has focus.

Redundant WAI-ARIA attribute

4.1.2 Name, Role, Value

A WAI-ARIA attribute that has the exact same features as the HTML element it has been applied to has been used. The WAI-ARIA attribute is redundant since it doesn't provide the user with any additional information.

For landmarks it has previously been a recommendation to use HTML5 and WAI-ARIA landmark roles together (e.g. WAI-ARIA role="navigation" on HTML5 "nav" elements) to maximize support, but with the widespread adoption of HTML5 this is no longer needed.

The WAI-ARIA attribute can be removed without any impact for end users. The result will be cleaner, easier to maintain code.
